BALANCE WITH BOSU BALL

As skiers, we know that balance is an essential skill, but it's one we often take for granted. While we know that building muscle strength and endurance in the gym will help improve our skiing ability, we don't think of improving balance and coordination in the same way.

Improving balance is about more than just learning to stay centered. It's about motor control and proprioception—that is, understanding how to move your body to adapt to changes in your environment. "It's about how your brain perceives where you are in terrain, relative to the ground," explains JC Cole, Human Performance Director for Ski and Snowboard Club Vail in Minturn, Colo. It's one of the most fundamental skills in skiing, yet it often goes overlooked in the gym: balance training. We take it for granted that we can stand balanced on our skis, but balance isn't finite. It's not only a question of if you are balanced on your skis, but how well. You may have a balanced athletic stance when you ski intermediate groomed runs, but can you remain balanced when the pitch or snow conditions suddenly change? Even professional skiers continue to work on balance and proprioception—awareness of your body within space—because the better your balance, the better your ability to react to changing conditions. A Bosu ball is a versatile piece of equipment that can be used in many ways, but no matter how you use it, you'll challenge stabilizer muscles big and small. Bonus: A Bosu offers a low-impact modification for plyo moves.

Bosu Ball Movements

Squat + Squat Jump

Starting Position: Stand on ball, feet hip-width apart. Lower to squat, keeping head and chest forward, knees over ankles.
Move To: From squat, push off of Bosu to explode straight into the air; land back on Bosu in squat position.

Stand on Bosu and shift weight onto right leg, making sure right foot is centered on ball. Slowly bend right leg and push hips back to lower into pistol squat. Engage glutes, hamstring, quad, and core to return to standing.

Bosu Reverse Lunge

Lateral Hop Across Bosu

Start Position: Stand next to Bosu, feet hip-width apart.

Move to: Soften knees and jump laterally onto Bosu and land in squat (for extra challenge, land on single leg). Hold for balance. Push off of Bosu to hop and land back in squat on other side of Bosu. That's one rep. Repeat towards other side to return to start position.

Alternating Lunge Jumps

Start position: Get into lunge position, back foot on floor and forward foot centered on ball.

Move to: Push off both feet to explode straight into the air; switch legs midair to land back in lunge position, other foot forward. Hold for balance, then repeat.
